Low Fiber Diet

Low Fiber Information

- Fiber is in many everyday foods such as fruits, vegetables, and grains. Once it enters your body, it is not fully digested. As a result, the undigested fibers continue to make their way through the intestine and eventually exit the body as stool.
- A low fiber diet reduces the frequency and volume of stool that passes through the intestines.
- Limiting the amount of fiber can help the body prepare for certain procedures such as a colonoscopy. In some cases, limiting the amount of fiber can lessen irritation to the digestive tract and heal in certain medical conditions.
- At times, conditions may require a low fiber diet, such as Crohn's Disease, Diverticulitis, Ulcerative Colitis, and Radiation therapy to the pelvis and lower bowel.
- The low fiber diet can be adequate in nutrients when you eat a variety of foods. When the diet is limited or followed for a long time, fruit and vegetable intake may be low.
- The low fiber diet is intended for short term use. Ask your provider or dietitian how long the diet should be followed.
- Check food label Nutrition Facts for fiber content on foods purchased. Refer to the Food Guide on the following pages for food choices.

General Low Fiber Diet Recommendations

- A diet with less than 8 grams of fiber per day is considered low fiber.
- Look for foods that have less than 1 gram of fiber per serving
- Use bread, crackers, cereal, and pasta with refined wheat (i.e., white flour) or rice rather than whole-grain or bran products.
- Use ripe, canned, or cooked fruits without skin or seeds.
- Use pureed/tender cooked vegetables without skin or seeds.
- Avoid seeds, nuts, coconut, popcorn, dried fruit, dried peas, beans, and lentils.
